Improved Cotton Gins.

McLENDEN'S PATENT.

THE subscriber purchased two years ago, McLENDEN'S PATENT IM-PROVEMENT TO COTTON GINS, for the Councies of Abbeville, Edgefield, and Newberry; and in that time has sold many of them, and to the entire satisfaction of his patrons. The improvement is applied to the old gin at a trifling expense; and with these material advantages-that it will enable the Gin to gin from onefourth to one-third more, and to produce a cleaner and better lint. He has numerous certificates from cotton planfers to this effect, and also from cotton buyers, stating that the cotton from this Improved Gir will command from one to one a balf cents more per pound. Agents will be sent out, and the public patronage is solicited in their behalf.

Last night, I wandered forth at eve,
And rested on the old grey stone.
Where we together oft have spent
The twilight ours of days long gone,
I thought e'er all the tender love,
We there in murmurs, did betery,
And told my trembling heart,
She loves me though so far away.

The perfumed breath of gardens near,
We're borns upon the air of night,
Where sweet pale flowers upon the hedge
Shone bride like in the silver light.
A mocking bird suspended near
Poured on the eve his varied lay,
Ard seemed to utter in his song,
She loves me, though so far away.

I rose and saunter'd to the bridge.

And heard the rippling waters flow.

And thought of how we there had stood,

Those lovely nights, long, long ago.

The tiny wavelets murmuring broke

Upon the pier in silver spray.

And seemed to whisper, as they fell,

She loves me, though so far away. The moon climbed up the arch of blue,
And made each spot of earth more fair,
"Till every leaf, that trembling hung,
Graw silving in the soft, still air.
The stars gazed down with pitying look,
And seem to my lone heart to say,
Again ye two shall wander here,
She loves me, though so far away.
